Dr. Philipson, who has for twentyfive years been rabbi of Rockdale Avewhich, he said, are at work to under-mine the progressive structure of the reform faith and clothe it again with the formality and Orientalism which it has rejected, in the light of his au-thoritative position in the Reformed Jewish Church, was regarded as most

To go back to the Eastern ideals, which the Reform synagogue has abandoned, warned Dr. Philipson, would be to begin over again a battle already won. The old forms practiced in England, Germany, Russia and other strengholds of orthodoxy, he said, are unsuited to American Jewish life. This is shown, he said, by the utter irreligion manifested by a large proportion of American Jews born of immigrant parents who cling to the old faith. The new generation finds the old synagogue archaic and unsympathetic, and in the absence of a syna-gogue that answers more closely the call of their spirits, drift into irreligion and become lost to the faith. Dr. Philipson made a strong plea for the preservation of Reform Judaism from the encroachments of the neonationalistic ideals bound up in Zionism and kindred movements. The ad-herents of the liberal Jewish Church in America, he said, compared with the members of the orthodox branches, are far in the minority. Upon this minority, he said, rests to-day the re-sponsibility of preserving the liberal faith against hostile influences, and
